Porphyrias 1 – The Acute Hepatic Porphyrias

Friday, April 26, 2019

8:00 – 9:15 a.m. SCC 6039

Sylvia Bottomley, MD
Emeritus Professor Active, Department of Medicine

Professional Practice Gap: The diagnosis of an acute hepatic porphyria is often delayed with potential fatal consequences. This presentation will describe the clinical presentations, discuss the benefits of timely diagnosis and emphasize the importance of appropriate treatment with hemin for severe symptoms.

Objectives: Upon completion of this session, participants will improve their competence and performance by being able to:

Describe the pathophysiology and clinical features of the four acute hepatic porphyrias

Recognize the challenges in recognizing an acute porphyria attack and how to obtain a prompt diagnosis with the single specific laboratory test

Identify the further laboratory testing required for establishing the diagnosis of each acute hepatic porphyria type

Describe the appropriate treatment measures of the acute attack and the long-term management of these disorders

Disclosure & Resolution Report

The University of Oklahoma College of Medicine and the Irwin H. Brown Office of Continuing Professional Development must ensure balance, independence, objectivity and scientific rigor in all its activities. We have implemented a process where everyone who is in a position to control the content of an educational activity has disclosed to us all relevant financial relationships with any commercial interest. In addition, should it be determined that a conflict of interest exists as a result of a financial relationship one may have, this will be resolved prior to the activity. This policy is designed to provide the target audience with an opportunity to review any affiliations between the CME organizers and presenters and supporting organizations for the purpose of determining the potential presence of bias or influence over educational content. The following is a summary of this activities disclosure information.
